

species are in the main subterranean and are so much more monotonous in their habits than the species of Formica. Nevertheless, an intensive study of the ethology of the European and North American Lasii is bound to bring to light many surprising facts. This is sufficiently indicated in the preceding paragraphs notwithstanding the large amount of conjecture which they contain.