

by my attempts to capture unharmed specimens. I had need to spend a second day collecting with the greatest care before I had specimens fit for proper examination. To Colonel Ingham again we are indebted for the name, Plagiolepis exigua, rel. Later on Mr. Stewart discovered this species in the mid-house, and in December 1905 he showed me their nesting ants, inside the hollow metal rods from which the pitcher-plants are suspended.
